Lead Full-Stack Engineer (Next.js)

I saw you're looking for someone to build and own a Next.js app with AI features. That's exactly what I do - it's my primary stack, and I just shipped a production platform using it.

I built needthisdone.com from scratch: 165 React components, 72 API routes, a visual page editor with drag-and-drop, and an AI chatbot that uses OpenAI embeddings to answer questions from internal data. I made the architecture decisions, wrote the code, and I'm the one who gets paged when something breaks.

Looking at what you need - someone who can lead technically while staying hands-on, partner with Product and Design, and communicate clearly - that's how I work. At my last role, I became the person the CEO came to when he needed technical concepts explained in a way that actually made sense. I've written Python scripts to rescue content from messy PDFs, handled data migrations that used to take days and got them done same-day, and documented systems well enough that my README gets used as a writing sample.

I know you're asking for 7+ years. I don't have that on paper. What I do have is a complete production system I built from the ground up - frontend, backend, AI, payments, auth, the works. I've made the architectural decisions and lived with the consequences. That's a different kind of experience, but it's real.

Happy to chat if you want to dig into the details.
